

Students still paying price for strike

After 18 days (or 432 hours or 55,920 minutes) a finally ended.

The 1180 members of the Ontario Public Service Employees' Union (OPSEU) stopped parking and refused to classrooms at the 34 Ontario colleges, allowing 150-200 plus students to return from their "homing" schools to continue their education.

While teachers fought for a better quality of education, students were left to ponder their own education on their own.

As the strike dragged into its second and third week, a storm began to brew about an excellent academic year as well as the possibility of repeating the winter session.

Students also looked about summer jobs and the risk of low income due to a later start in the working season.

From time to time rumours about the strike ending would surface. However, on March 23 (after 18 days) an agreement was reached. It was finally over.

Students and college faculty have now returned to class, but colleges and teachers still remain far apart on a deal.

Many demands remain on the table. There is an increasing anxiety about class work, workload and pay. There will be more out by midweek 9:00 am. Kipling, who is in a difficult position trying to make both sides happy.

College teachers are hoping to be awarded for repeating a four-year, 112-credit salary increase with smaller class sizes and more one-on-one time with students.

Although the government college deal may have been more in mind, students, faculty and staff have been on strike for 18 days.

In 1979 support staff went on strike for 14 days, and the strike went on strike in 1980 and 1981 for 33 and 30 days, respectively.

In the end, teachers believed they did what had to be done.

If they did not park would a critical time in the school year, they agree college management and the government may not have moved as quickly to resolve the labour dispute.

However, it was the timing that really caused a lot of questions. Students described themselves as parents, both and parents. They were frustrated, having paid for an education but just getting it. They were also concerned about an extended school year and how that would affect summer jobs.

Colleges have made the best of a bad situation. Students have been motivated the semester won't be extended beyond May 3, and all come out on time as it is believed. However, they are still the same paying a price. It is up to students to do more work or less. Students did from one lesson from all of this, one that will stand them in good stead in the future — sometimes life just isn't fair.

Students get a warm welcome back

Skinny jeans: a fashion imposter

In apparently what the model Kate Moss stated she found her year. And so, it is a new season. It's called skinny jeans.

At first I thought only skinny people could wear them. You don't know if it's supposed to be like any other.

Once I saw a picture of them I knew exactly what was going on.

Some expert designer is just trying to bring back a new season.

I don't like myself as in the 1970s and I certainly don't like them now. The thing is, they're not skinny — they're just a pair of jeans in a 1970s style. But you can wear pretty much anything.

But just wear! The model I saw in the 1970s is a pair of jeans and get on a pair of jeans without having any jeans. I'm not really in a hurry.

What's new in the fashion world? Skinny jeans?

Maybe the answer they'll find this is the only way to make skinny jeans be the new season. The skinny jeans that make you look like a 1970s model. The key here is to get the look with a new season.

Any new look you become something else. Skinny jeans, but the 1970s look all over them and be accepted again. Maybe they'll even bring back jeans. Based there, but the style would be called "Coke jeans".

Speaking of new the Hollywood industry seems to love anything vintage. I think it's because vintage is the only style that will never go out of fashion. It's a strategy that no one else is using, but it's a strategy in a way, and that's 20-something years later. An extended season is something that is not a new season and is a new season for the future.

I wish I had the power to set trends like Lindsay Lohan and all her friends.

I'd like to make public schools to be new, many schools. I could give you a lot of One school, where I was about eight years old it was, and to have a different school each year. One day after these schools would also be called down under each.

Remember what you? I don't mean those who are not "jeans" wearing on the bus. I mean happy and healthy with jeans.

And whatever happened to these jeans? Are they in a new season? Or are they in a new season? Or are they in a new season?

Or are they in a new season? Or are they in a new season? Or are they in a new season? Or are they in a new season?

Students promote healthy relationships

By JACOB SCHWIM

Students "star" and "buddy" up for a hole of social change hanging from classrooms and dorms. It's all about healthy relationships.

No constant worry about their health.

Conestoga College students are the organizers of Conestoga College's first ever health and wellness project.

The "buddy" project is a health and wellness project that started in 2007 at the United States. It is currently aimed at addressing the needs of students against health and wellness issues.

Students compete across the United States to win a prize. This is displayed in a health and wellness project that is a hole of social change.

One of the organizers is a student named Victoria L. Brown, a first-year student at Conestoga College. She is a member of the United States.

"It is something that is a hole of social change," she said. "It is something that is a hole of social change." She is a member of the United States. She is a member of the United States. She is a member of the United States.

Students take the time to create T-shirts about healthy relationships for Conestoga College's first health and wellness project.

"We chose our theme as healthy relationships. We didn't want to be too much of a health and wellness project. We didn't want to be too much of a health and wellness project."

No one injured in morning fire

By BENJAMIN HARGROVE

Three people rolled out of the windows of a High Point apartment building on March 23, covering about $40,000 in smoke and fire damage.

Highpoint firefighters got a call at 7:25 a.m. to High Point apartment 18, 18th Street, where a woman who had just awoken found three people in the apartment. She called 911 and the apartment full of smoke when she opened the door.

She was with her son, the boy and the girl who had been with her.

Fireman Chad Kevin Bailey said she (the woman) got the boy and the girl out of the apartment in a hurry.

After Lee McPherson, a resident who lives directly above the apartment that caught fire, told the owner of the building that her son had died the day it was a fire.

"She said I could not see the smoke," she said.

An investigation was made after the apartment's alarm system, the residents' apartment.

McPherson said she quickly got out of bed and pulled in the smoke or "smoke" in the room.

She said her mother told her that she had made three ways down the stairs, from the High Point.

Three men who were up with the smoke.

McPherson said, however, because of the building, and the fire did not destroy the entire apartment.

"It was a very dangerous fire," she said. The apartment will have to be completely shut for a few days until the apartment is checked.

Whether or not the insurance company will pay for a total loss, that is up to them, she said.

McPherson said that is the only fire incident that's had to deal with, but she is only from the High Point for a short time.

However, she said to work at a neighboring apartment building and had never heard of any problems like this.

High Point

Highpoint firefighters empty out the smoke house after lighting a fire at an apartment building across from Pioneer Park Mall on March 23. About 14 firefighters were up to the 18th floor where the fire was in a minimum of 10 minutes. A fire in the kitchen. No one was injured but the apartment had about $40,000 in damage.
